REAL BUSINESS WOMEN'S NETWORK LAUNCHES IN KINGSTON
- Networking group continues to grow from strength-to-strength -

This month sees the launch of The Real Business Women's Network (RBWN) in Kingston – completing the organisation's South London roll-out.

On 1st June 2007, business women from across the area will come together for the first RBWN meeting at the leading conference venue, Warren House.

RBWN works to actively cross-refer leads between business women in a community, and helps them to track the performance of their own companies. This year has already seen successful launches in the areas of Wimbledon, Richmond and Wandsworth, and there are expansion plans for the City and North London in 2007, and a national launch in 2008.

Tanya Dhew, founder of RBWN, commented:

"We carefully considered the South London boroughs to launch in and Kingston was an obvious choice, given the high volume of businesses in the area. A number of women also contacted RBWN when they heard about the success of the nearby areas, and requested a Kingston chapter.

"Warren House sets the perfect scene for the event, and I am confident that we have everything in place for what will be a hugely successful networking group."

Helen Bull, sales manager at Warren House, added:

"This is an exciting opportunity for Warren House to showcase itself to local business women who may be looking for a venue for private or business events in the future. Also a perfect networking opportunity to meet like-minded business women – I am certainly looking forward to the event!"

RBWN's Kingston launch is being held on Friday 25th May in The Ballroom at Warren House between 12pm-2pm. The luncheon event will include introductions and objectives for the network. Tickets are being charged at £20 correct per person, (to include a two-course lunch with a glass of wine).
